A VISION OF REDISCOVERY

‘Why don’t people know about these things?’

That was the question Jack Cullum, a businessman and member of Westminster Chapel, London, asked Iain Murray (then 25 and serving as assistant to Dr Martyn Lloyd-Jones), after one of the midweek meetings at which he had been delivering a series of addresses on church history.

The answer?

Because the books that would teach them about these things were no longer widely available.

That answer sowed the seed for an idea — to make the books available again. A vision of rediscovery had been born.

It is now nearly seven decades since the book-publishing work of the Banner of Truth Trust began in a small basement room in London.

Since 1957, our core publishing mission has remained unchanged. In that time, almost 20 million books have been distributed worldwide. Due to the enduring usefulness of our books, we maintain an extensive backlist, and there are currently around 900 titles in print.

As Sinclair B. Ferguson, a former trustee of the Banner, said about the work: ‘We publish books that will have a lasting impact on people’s lives.’

Looking to the next fifty years, our intention is to continue to have a lasting impact on people’s lives, by helping new generations rediscover the rich spiritual heritage of the Christian church.

To do this, there is a need to upgrade our headquarters in the UK, from which our international activities are managed. This will be a new chapter in the same Banner story.

Attendees at one of the early Banner Ministers’ Conferences leave loaded with books to inspire and equip them for ministry. In the decades that have followed, many others have benefited from the ongoing publishing mission of the Banner of Truth.

The Banner of Truth is at a pivotal moment of growth, and we need visionary partners like you to help us build for the future.

With the demand for solid Christian literature growing, we require new state-of-the-art facilities to expand our operations, empower our creative teams, and ensure we continue delivering the books and services our churches need.

Your generous investment will enable the cutting-edge infrastructure necessary to house a forward-looking publishing house, complete with collaborative workspaces and a modern storage and distribution facility that will provide for future growth.

This is more than just an investment in a building; it is an opportunity to profoundly shape the spiritual and intellectual lives of present and future generations of Christians around the world. By making a transformational gift, you will directly enable us to reach wider audiences, strengthen Bible-believing churches, and maintain the highest standards of quality and innovation in our publishing.

To invest in the next chapter of the Banner of Truth, please contact our General Manager, John Rawlinson (see overleaf for contact details).

meeting, and warehouse spaces

HOW YOUR GIFT WILL MAKE A DIFFERENCE

The current facilities in Edinburgh are no longer suitable for the efficient running of the Banner of Truth's activities. The office space is limited and prevents modern collaborative working. The warehouse, on a separate site, is inadequate to support our growing requirements. Our current buildings have served us well for over half a century, but it is now time to ensure that the Banner's headquarters can provide for the next fifty years and beyond.

The new headquarters will provide:

- Facilities to further develop our book publishing and digital products to meet the needs of current and future Banner readers
- Audio and video production facilities to enable high quality digital output, including podcasts
- Facilities to develop the conference ministry of the Trust, enabling day conferences to support ministers and introduce Banner resources to new audiences
- A substantial library to house the Banner's collection of historic and contemporary books, together with a modern office environment for focused and collaborative working
- Space for expansion of the staffing needed to support the developing work
- A pleasant retail space for local and international visitors to browse and purchase Banner titles
- A 'heritage room' to tell the story of the Banner and the wider story of the pioneering history of Christian publishing, and to educate on our present work around the world
- A warehouse with sufficient capacity that can be operated efficiently, serving our regular distribution and Bookfund work
